“ I never met Bill face-to-face. We were "telephone friends." I am a fellow accordionist, having played for over 65 years. So, Bill and I had a lot in common. I enjoyed visiting with him over the telephone...he was to ill to get together with me. Bill told me several stories about his musical career, including having travelled around the country with Charles Magnante, who was one of the top accordionists in the world. I wish we had had more time, so that we could meet in person. He was quite proud of his accordion collection, and was going to show it to me. Bill never told me anything about his family, or if he had one. He did say hecame from a family of several siblings, but that he was the last one left alive. If there is any family out there, please accept my condolences.

“ Bill taught my whole family how to play piano and he had such a love and enthusiasm for his accordion. He will be missed!
