“ When you went home i went with you and stayed the night so many times. Kaye always loved me like a second mom and always made sure I was safe until my mom got home. Always smiling always helping people. She is a true angel. Kaye you are loved and will be missed. Another journey is waiting fir you, may you be at peace and one with the universe. I love you. “ Kaye was a dear friend of mine for many years. There was one incident that I will always remember her for: she wanted to pray with me, alone. That may not seem like much, but in the church we were in, a Christian church no less, people did not pray together outside of saying a blessing over a meal. I know that sounds strange, and in the church I now belong to people pray all the time, with one another, in groups, often in church, outside of church. Praying is a large part of who we are and what we do, so I fondly remember the woman who brought that practice into my experience with her and that church that one time.
