“ I remember when i went to his house for Christmas and open presents. But now that he is gone I don't remember his death I remember his life

“ I love my dad. He has always pushed me to do better in all that I do. I thought at times the goals that I reached wasn't good enough for him, but I now realize he was just pushing me to my maximum potential. He was strong that way. Able to lovingly get you to do your best. Everything he has taught me about, cars, math, wrestling, priesthood duties and responsibilities, service, and many more things is what I strive to do better at. That's what he would want me to do. He will be missed. I love him so much. I can't wait to see him again. I know that through the Atonement of Jesus Christ, I will be able to embrace him with both arms as he will to me after this life and that we will be together again for eternity. Love, Trevor (son)
